"If there was one more song I wanted to speak for the album, it was "Me & You." The video illustrates the continued presence of hate that spans hundreds of years in our country that so many thought was a thing of the past. We chose a retro sound to address a retro issue when Trayvon Martin was murdered, thinking it was one off—that we'd never need to release: the taking of Black lives is an epidemic and change is imminent.

This song is a call to pour some real love into our interactions with one another—for change gon' take not only me, but Me & You."
